

Angels on hand to help the risk-takers in

Barry J Whyte

One of the purported birthplaces of 17th-century Irish economic thinker Richard Cantillon, the man who developed the concept of the entrepreneur as the risk-taker, is the village of Ballybegue in Co Cork.

Gerald Leen, one of the founders of biomedical technology firm PolyMed, is also from Ballybegue. Leen is one of the graduates of the Entrepreneur Experience, a one-day annual event that aims to help the risk-taker reduce that risk through seminars and talks from leading business people.

This month, in neighbouring Co Cork, 24 experienced entrepreneurs will team up with 24 up-and-coming business people in this year's instalment of the event.

"I went there in 2012 with an early stage concept," Leen said. "It was a reasonably well developed business idea, but the company was just a shell. It only existed on paper – it had no premises, no investment, and no revenue."

Leen was assigned a mentor, the healthcare entrepreneur Johnny Walker, with whom he had "conversations about how to raise money and turn it into a business, the nuts and bolts of taking it from concept to realising the vision."

"The company set up premises last year in February 2013 in Cahirciveen," according to Leen, and has currently three employees, with plans to increase that to "five employees within the next six months".

It's not just early stage start-ups that can benefit from the Entrepreneur Experience. In 2013, Arun Kapil's Cork-based spice company Green Saffron was already an established business, but he needed help scaling it to the next level and dealing with investors.

"It was really sceptical before I got there," he said. "But I was absolutely chuffed to bits."

There were lots of practical advice, Kapil said, but a significant part of its value was finding out that there were other people out there doing the same as he was.

"I liked the camaraderie," he said. "Being in business you have to be devoted to it, you're out there on your own. Your social life can be lonesome."

Leen agrees. "A lot of the people I met I wouldn't have been personally aware of [but they were] successful entrepreneurs and business people," he said. "The country's full of them."

According to Kapil, who is half English and half Indian, too often the concept of an entrepreneur is a meaningless shibboleth that gets bandied about as a hollow buzzword.

In India, he said, there is a Punjabi word, jaggard, which essentially means: "Here's a job to be done, so go on and do it. Don't complain you have no choice."

In the west, "that seems to be called entrepreneur, [but] it has been elevated to this cult status." The Entrepreneur Experience, however, offers more practical advice than the current empty imprecations to "fall better".

"I found out," Kapil said, "a little bit more about the Irish nature, and about how to trade in Ireland."

For Leen, it was about practical support, too. "Put it like this, I have an open door to Johnny Walker and occasionally we exchange emails but I know he's there, an angel on my shoulder if I need a bit of advice."

The Entrepreneur Experience takes place next weekend in Cork in conjunction with Cork ICC.

The Sunday Business Post is the official media partner, with other sponsors including Ernst & Young and Allianz.

Innovators gear up for the future

The Sunday Business Post profiles 12 high-flying Irish entrepreneurs well placed to make their mark in the coming years

Kieran Walsh: chief executive of WhatSalon

Hoping to tap into a multibillion euro market with a mobile app, which aims to do for hair and beauty what iHalo did for the taxi trade, WhatSalon launched in Cork last year. The company has developed a mobile application that allows the user to find and book last-minute hair and beauty appointments in their local area at the touch of a button.

Under the stewardship of Kieran Walsh, the company has developed an innovative application that combines handset geographic location with other data to provide a real-time and value-added experience to both consumers and salons alike.

Walsh has experience in the area as co-founder of National Beauty Distribution, one of Ireland's leading distributors of beauty and cosmetic products which services the majority of department stores, airports, pharmacies and boutiques in the country.

According to Walsh, WhatSalon offers a robust, scalable and real-time platform that both salons and clients can use to access last-minute hair and beauty appointments in high-quality, local salons. The next step for the company is looking at launching into the British market, where WhatSalon has already signed deals with four major salon software companies.

Stephanie Lynch: founder and chief executive of OnTheQ.ie

As websites and apps gradually replace the travel guidebook as most tourists' guide of choice, Institute of Technology Tralee graduate Stephanie Lynch has come up in front of the competition with OnTheQ.ie.

The site is a tourism website with a difference, promoting off the beaten track locations using video and blog content through the eyes of the locals rather than typical guidebook fare. Lynch's vision is that OnTheQ.ie will be the YouTube of tourism, the only website worldwide to share tourism videos in one spot.

Launched a year ago, OnTheQ.ie has already logged hidden gems all over Ireland and is now reaching countries worldwide such as Australia, the US and Spain.

According to Lynch, the site is by the locals for the explorer, using crowdsourcing to gather content from locals. At the moment, revenue is gained from production of video and blog content to promote off the beaten track locations.

Lynch came up with the idea for OnTheQ.ie during her final year in college and entered for the Young Entrepreneur Programme before moving on to the Ignite start-up programme in University College Cork.

....

Deirdre Collins: founder and managing director of Dee's Wholefoods

Frustrated by the lack of convenient healthy food available in supermarket shelves, Deirdre took matters into her own hands and decided to look into developing her own range of healthy foods.

Collins, who has a degree in food science and nutrition, spent two years developing a range of foods such as veggie sausages, a product which is made from allergen-friendly, clear label ingredients. The company has now taken its range of 100 per cent natural, vegan and gluten-free products to more than 300 stores.

Starting off with Wholefood Burgers, which are made of nutritious whole grain seeds and fresh Irish vegetables, Dee's Wholefoods has developed a nationwide reputation as a whole foods specialist with retail sales of more than €500,000 in Ireland last year.

Most recently, the company has moved into the export market and launched a range in Irish super markets Waitrose and Booths.

The company has also attracted attention on both sides of the Irish sea, such as being highly commended at the UK Free From Food Awards 2013, receiving a gold award at that Irish Quality Food Awards and being named a finalist in the meat-free category at the UK Quality Food Awards.

Bill Wilmot: chief executive and founder of Smart Visibility

Using analytics, econometrics and statistics, Cork-based Category Cubed delivers a ground-breaking trade promotion optimisation software solution to fast-moving consumer goods (FMCG) companies.

Using a software as a service (SaaS) model, the company delivers extremely challenging and complex information via intuitive iPad dashboards.

The company has directly engaged with 20 major customers since June 2013 and is already generating revenues from six customers.

According to chief executive Bill Wilmot, Category Cubed has solved a difficult and challenging problem and is now focusing on growth.

Wilmot, who graduated from UCC with a commerce degree in 1996, previously worked as a project manager in a US multinational based in Cork. Since 2006 Wilmot has worked as a senior commercial manager in the food industry with specific responsibility for negotiating at director and senior management level with national and international retailers and discounters as well as large food service operators.

Robert Cosgrave: chief operating officer of LearnLode

The company's focus will be solutions for the manufacturing industry that increase production efficiencies, reduce downtime and maximise production asset utilisation of sectors that can benefit from advanced mobile technology. A new Irish firm is taking advantage of new technology and developing a mobile application with the aim of transforming the management of manufacturing.

Cork-based Smart Visibility, founded by Bill Wilmot last year, won the annual SAP Innovation Challenge, a prestigious manufacturing competition which took place in Las Vegas last year. The firm has developed an application which allows manufacturing companies to view, analyse and interact with their production processes, by allowing access to real time data from machines and enterprise management systems, such as SAP securely using handheld smart devices.

The concept was developed by Wilmot, who saw the opportunity to use technology to improve how manufacturing companies can monitor and interact with their production processes more efficiently.

According to Wilmot, Smart Visibility is a software development company that aims to disrupt the way the manufacturing industry interacts with their production systems. The company's focus will be solutions for the manufacturing industry that increase production efficiencies, reduce downtime and maximise production asset utilisation by using mobile technologies in an innovative way that provides context to the mass of data that exists, and optimises it.

A seasoned entrepreneur, in 2008 Wilmot co-founded Cork-based firm Milestone Solutions to provide manufacturing consultancy to help multinational manufacturers including Pfizer and Boston Scientific.

....

Peter Conway: chief executive of Travelbuddy

Travelbuddy is a tourism solutions company born out of 23 years of relevant industry experience. Under chief executive Peter Conway, the company provides a unique mobile and online booking solution that combines with the latest location targeting and dynamic push messaging technologies to address a global tourism problem.

According to Conway, the company's platform takes a new approach to knowledge sharing, by using an analytics engine to help predict what customer service agents need to know next, and identify gaps and weaknesses in a firm's knowledge sharing.

The company's platform takes a new approach to knowledge sharing, by using an analytics engine to help predict what customer service agents need to know next, and identify gaps and weaknesses in a firm's knowledge sharing.

According to Conway, the company has developed a product that addresses a specific problem within tourism – how to drive ancillary sales. The product is being quickly adopted as it is a solution that is born from within the industry for the global industry.

Conway has been involved in tourism for the past 23 years, including running his own specialist travel company in Cork.

On the back of this experience, he was well aware of the problems and challenges which exist within the travel industry and came up with a solution to a key problem that is globally scalable, which integrates the online world and location-aware apps to create a whole new marketplace in tourism.

Travelbuddy is the company's prime-facing brand but the firm's route to market is to white-label the solution for third party companies with a significant tourism footprint.

The solution is currently available for Ireland and the firm also has seven major US travel agents already signed up.

TUI, the largest tour operator in Europe, also recently signed an agreement to work with Travelbuddy to deliver 12,000 products on mobile.

....

Brendan Finucane: chief executive and founder of Vconnecta

In the age of mobile communications, the challenge is to keep ahead of the game. Cork-based Vconnecta aims to help organisations make a meaningful difference to their communities by providing community engagement technology to improve relationships within a local area.

According to Cosgrave, the firm's prime focus and immediate challenge is to add additional resources to sustain the business through 2014. As Softi was a Service business, it operates at high gross margins but requires significant upfront costs in platform development, sales and marketing.

According to Cosgrave, the firm's prime focus and immediate challenge is to add additional resources to sustain the business through 2014. As Softi was a Service business, it operates at high gross margins but requires significant upfront costs in platform development, sales and marketing.

Vconnecta is the company's prime-facing brand but the firm's route to market is to white-label the solution for third party companies with a significant tourism footprint.

On the back of this experience, he was well aware of the problems and challenges which exist within the travel industry and came up with a solution to a key problem that is globally scalable, which integrates the online world and location-aware apps to create a whole new marketplace in tourism.

Travelbuddy is the company's prime-facing brand but the firm's route to market is to white-label the solution for third party companies with a significant tourism footprint.

The solution is currently available for Ireland and the firm also has seven major US travel agents already signed up.

TUI, the largest tour operator in Europe, also recently signed an agreement to work with Travelbuddy to deliver 12,000 products on mobile.

....

Owen Loughrey: chief executive of Valhalla Technology, trading as My Store Analytics

Valhalla has developed a meet-and-greet technology solution built specifically for the life sciences industry, one of the firm's primary market being medical command centres.

The company is run by Maurice Murphy, an award-winning designer with more than 20 years' experience in the design and technology industry, working with some of the world's leading pharmaceutical and commercial brands. As founder and chief executive of digital agency Verbi Media, Murphy's work has been recognised at the Euronet Golden Spider Awards, the Web Awards, the American Design Awards and the Communicate Awards.

No stranger to introducing innovative products to the market, in 2009 Loughrey successfully negotiated the exclusive distribution rights for Vibram Five Fingers shoes for Ireland and formed Barefoot to distribute the brand to retailers before successfully exiting the company through a trade sale last year.

My Store Analytics (MSA) is an Irish technology start-up which aims to deliver the power of on-line analysis to physical retail outlets. Unlike other selling counterparts, brick-and-mortar retailers have up to now been unable to understand the buying behaviour of their visitors and drastically improve their effectiveness in identifying successful marketing campaigns.

MSA has designed a product that allows users to do everything from building customised attendee itineraries and managing break-out sessions to creating professional-looking medically themed websites and publishing reports in minutes.

....

....

Michael Ryan: managing director of LiTE Enterprise AV

As all major airlines focus on ways to reduce the operational weight of an aircraft, LiTE Enterprise is addressing the market need, having designed and developed lightweight management accounts and to update the board with regard to the financial, operational and strategic position of the company at each board meeting.

Tinta has been set up with the mission to position Vastif as a technology platform.

According to the company, the benefits of the patented technology lie in the ability to provide protection, comfort and support for human body parts within sports or leisure items, as well as adaptability, fold-down and mouldability to objects within manufacturing and industry applications.

Beat Goetschi joined Tinta in December 2013 to set up the company and act as its general manager.

He holds a Global Executive MBA degree from IESE Business School, and has worked with global market leaders within the IT and construction industries.

....

....

Michael Ryan: managing director of LiTE Enterprise AV

Developed by the Centre for Applied Research Technological Research and Innovation, the leading private research and innovation body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the Institute of Directors is dedicated to advocating for improved standards of performance and fully understood risk and human resources.

A core function of the role of the managing director is to implement the agreed strategy and deliver sustainable growth and effective operating plans that reflect the longer-term objectives and priorities established by the board.

Company policy: Formulating and successfully implementing company policy is a key responsibility of the managing director. In conjunction with the board, the managing director should ensure that adequate policies, processes and procedures are in place within the company, in particular relating to audit, risk and human resources.

Operational and financial planning: A core function of the role of the managing director is to implement the agreed strategy and deliver sustainable growth and effective operating plans that reflect the longer-term objectives and priorities established by the board.

Maureen Quinn is chief executive of the Institute of Directors in Ireland. It is the representative body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to advocating for improved standards of performance and fully understood risk and human resources.

....

....

Communication and representation: The managing director generally assumes the 'voice-and-face' of the company and acts as the spokesperson for the organisation. Representing the company to media, major customers and professional associations is an important element of the role.

The managing director is also responsible for building, recruiting and maintaining an effective executive management team and for creating a culture, together with the board, that is aligned to the company's strategic mission and values.

Reporting to the board: The managing director should maintain open dialogue with the chairman of the board, and the relationship should be one of consultation and cooperation.

The managing director should provide leadership and direction at the top of the board meeting.

The board of directors should provide leadership and direction at the top of the board meeting.

....

....

About the IoD: The Institute of Directors in Ireland is the representative body for more than 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to developing and improving the effectiveness and performance of directors and boards throughout Ireland. Visit iid.ie to find out more.

The Institute of Directors in Ireland is the representative body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to developing and improving the effectiveness and performance of directors and boards throughout Ireland. Visit iid.ie to find out more.

The Institute of Directors in Ireland is the representative body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to developing and improving the effectiveness and performance of directors and boards throughout Ireland. Visit iid.ie to find out more.

The Institute of Directors in Ireland is the representative body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to developing and improving the effectiveness and performance of directors and boards throughout Ireland. Visit iid.ie to find out more.

The Institute of Directors in Ireland is the representative body for over 1,500 directors and senior executives within the private and public sectors. As the leading voice in the debate on improving corporate governance standards, the institute is dedicated to developing and improving the effectiveness and performance of directors and boards throughout Ireland. Visit iid.ie to find out more.

....

....

Responsibilities of a managing director are many and varied

The role of the managing director is largely concerned with the management of the company – i.e. implementing the agreed strategy and overseeing the day-to-day operations. The managing director is responsible for the performance of the company, as dictated by the board, and is accountable to the board for performance against strategic objectives.

While the role is complex and varied, there are a number of core responsibilities.

Implementing strategy: The managing director is responsible for implementing the agreed strategy and delivering sustainable growth and effective operating plans that reflect the longer-term objectives and priorities established by the board.

Company policy: Formulating and successfully implementing company policy is a key responsibility of the managing director. In conjunction with the board, the managing director should ensure that adequate policies, processes and procedures are in place within the company, in particular relating to audit, risk and human resources.

....

....